UK rushing oxygen concentrators & ventilators, to reach Delhi tomorrow

New Delhi: The transport of medicine concentrators and ventilators to New Delhi, which has been a hotspot for COVID-19 cases, is in progress. A transport team has been sent from Maharashtra to ensure the timely delivery of these medical supplies.

The transportation will take place today, and the medical equipment is expected to arrive in New Delhi by the end of the day. This move comes as the Delhi government has been facing a shortage of oxygen concentrators and ventilators, and the arrival of these supplies is seen as a welcome development.

The transport team, which consists of medical staff and volunteers, will take care of the safe transport of the equipment. The Delhi government has been working with various organizations and medical supplies companies to ensure the timely delivery of the equipment.

The arrival of these supplies is expected to help in treating COVID-19 patients in the city, which has been witnessing a surge in cases. The Delhi government has been coordinating with various agencies to ensure that the patients receive the best possible treatment.

The transport team will work in coordination with the Delhi government and the medical staff to ensure the smooth delivery of the equipment. The Delhi government has been working on increasing the number of hospitals and oxygen plants in the city, and the arrival of these supplies is expected to help in treating more patients.

The Delhi government has also announced that it will be setting up a COVID-19 hospital in each of the 12 districts of the city, and the arrival of these supplies is expected to help in treating patients in these hospitals.

The transport team will also be working on ensuring the safety of the medical staff and volunteers during the transport. The Delhi government has been working on ensuring the safety of the medical staff and volunteers during the pandemic, and the arrival of these supplies is expected to help in treating more patients.